Ruben picked two and handed Mike a quarter. "You're performing a public service," he said. "Keep the change."

Mike and Derek watched in awed silence as the older boy unwrapped the watermelon Fizzy Wizzy. He tucked the candy in his mouth, the wrapper in his pocket, winked, and ambled away.

Derek's tongue worked first. "He's a national treasure!" Derek called after him.

Ruben kept walking, but over his shoulder, he gave them a big thumbs-up.

How does Mike choose a business, and what is the outcome?

Tips for Talking About Texts

Engage with your child by asking these questions before, during, and after reading a variety of texts.

Before
- What do you think this book will be about? Why do you think that?
- What does the title tell you about this book?
- What do you already know about the topic of this book?
- What questions do you have?
- Do you think this story is real or imaginary?
- Who is the author of this book? Have you read any other books by this author?

During
- What do you think will happen next?
- Why do you think . . . ?
- Where and when does this story take place?
- How do you think the character will handle this situation?
- Why is the character . . . ?
- What does this word mean? How do you know?

After
- How would you retell this story, including parts from beginning, middle, and end?
- What questions would you ask the author?
- What do you think are the most important events in the story?
- How did this character change throughout the story?
- How would you have solved the problem?
- What evidence can you find?
